

"In fowls the normal temperature of the body is about 104 degrees Fahrenheit, and, if inoculated with the bacillus of anthrax, it will not grow in them, and the inoculation is harmless; but if they are made to stand with their feet in cold water until their temperature falls to 98 degrees, they succumb to inoculation with anthrax in the same way as oxen and men."

The microbes of pneumonia are ubiquitous, more so than those of phthisis, and are present in the nose and throat of very many healthy people. So long as these individuals retain their vitality pneumonia microbes do no harm.

MEASLES.

Four hundred and twenty-four cases and nineteen deaths have been reported. Measles is not a trivial disease, and should receive as much careful attention as any of the more, so-called, serious diseases. Measles as an uncomplicated disease nearly always ends in recovery but complications render it frequently a grave and fatal disease. Such complications are broncho-pneumonia, otitis media, laryngitis, cancerum oris and ulcerative stomatitis.

WHOOPIING COUGH.

Twenty-four deaths were reported for 1910. Physicians should remember that this disease must be reported.

Infantile paralysis, cerebro-spinal meningitis, influenza, and trachoma have not been reported as carefully as they should have been.
